GORILLA TREKKING

- Each hike to visit the chimpanzees or gorillas can take anywhere from 4 hours to about 8 hours depending where you find the primates. Some of the hikes can be strenuous so a HIGH level of fitness is required at altitudes of over 5000ft. Each gorilla group may be visited by up to eight tourists per day.
 - The climb begins through the lower slopes. As the slopes become steeper and rockier, the vegetation becomes thick and tangled; the guides must use their machetes to help clear a path. Huge trees, clinging vines and undergrowth add to the challenge of swift streams and slippery mud underfoot. Usually at around 8,000 foot signs of the huge animals become apparent. Once you find them you will have an hour of viewing.
 - There are approximately 800 mountain gorillas left in the world today and an estimated 400 of them reside in Uganda's Bwindi Impenetrable Forest. Currently there are nineteen gorilla families that are habituated and able to be visited on a daily basis.
 - Appropriately called "The Country of a Thousand Hills," Rwanda is predominantly grassy uplands and hills, with altitudes above sea level varying from a low of 3,960 feet (1,207 m) to Mt. Karisimbi, the highest of a range of extinct volcanoes in the northwest, which reach 14,786 feet (4,507 m). There are twelve gorilla groups currently acclimated for tourist visits in Volcanoes.

GORILLA FAMILIES

Gorillas are very sociable animals, living in groups of three to thirty. Being sedentary, they are continually looking for food in a living space that is comparatively restricted. They are active only during the daytime and build nests in which they pass the night. The nests built in trees are occupied by the females and young ones, while the males seem to prefer nests on the ground. Their food consists mainly of leaves, buds, tubers and sorts of wild celery from the umbelliferous family.

Damage to the vegetation is an obvious sign as the gorillas relish the young tender shoots and break older stems to suck the sap. The smell of gorilla may waft by in the stray breeze or, if one is really near, it is strong and unmistakable. Sounds, which can be remarkably loud crashes or dull reverberating growls of contentment, tell the visitor that the troop is nearby.

The troop consists usually of a dominant male and up to five or more females and their young. It is basically a stable family with the young only leaving after they reach sexual maturity. Females join another group while young males remain solitary until they have an opportunity of forming their own troop.

Their great size, extraordinary strength and the fact that they live in mysterious forests of luxuriant vegetation, have contributed to the mystique. This primate is of impressive dimensions; some silverback males attain over six feet in height and weigh more than 440 pounds. The head is massive and the huge jaws are equipped with powerful teeth.

Far from being an aggressive animal, as the legends claim, the gorilla is gentle and peaceful in its habits. It is only when threatened that he adopts an intimidating attitude in which he howls in a most frightful way and beats his chest with his fists. Should you find yourself in his presence when he feels threatened, you will be advised to assume a submissive, non-threatening attitude. Once his confidence has been restored, the gorilla goes on about his business accepting you.

There are few animals in Africa about which so many legends circulate. Trip Report:

I'm fresh back from another incredible AAC adventure.

The chimpanzee trek was also wonderful...What a beautiful creature and an incredible opportunity to see him...I'm so thankful that I was included on the trek. We had a lot more time just to observe at a respectful distance and the ability to observe the behaviors and have them explained by a wonderful guide was so helpful and educational...

The gorillas were amazing, of course. The guide and trackers were so helpful and very protective of the gorillas. After about 45 minutes, it seemed like the silverback was over it and the others followed. Rather than push them, we left a little early. It was great to see how much they respected the need for the gorillas to have some peace and quiet. It had also started thundering and I think they were concerned for our safety going downhill if there was a hard rain. I really appreciated that as well.

The trek in Rwanda was medium in difficulty... They were kind and helpful. I enjoyed walking through the terraced fields. It was beautiful. The gorillas also were amazing and we had clearer viewing. I had a few quiet minutes to sit and watch a female grooming the silverback. The gentleness brought tears to my eyes. Then after moving to get pictures of a female about 3.5 years old, she started walking past us. Before I could move aside, she tapped me with her hand and then put one of her back feet up on my leg. It was so unexpected and gentle...

This was one of my best trips ever!! From the time I got to The Boma, there was one highlight after another. My fellow travelers were amazing and I loved the small group aspect of the trip. Each person I came in contact with felt like a new friend...I am anticipating more trips to Africa and I can't wait to work together again to make that happen.Jennifer Steck
