NAIROBI

Nairobi, the third largest city in Africa, became the designate capital of Kenya in 1905. The city began as a treeless, swampy stretch of landscape with no human inhabitants but thousands of wild animals.

Railway engineers used the town as the base as they built the Uganda Railway and the city developed without much initial formal planning. In 1899 the first house was built for the chief Railway engineer, in 1901 the Railway club was formed, and by 1905 the Norfolk Hotel was under construction.

The most famous of the early pioneers was Baroness von Blixen, who lived on a coffee plantation on the outskirts of town from 1917 to 1931. Her story is immortalized by her book - and later the film - “Out of Africa”. Karen’s house is today a museum in the outer suburb called Karen after her.

In 1929, Mrs. Wilson, a 50-year old widow, flew to England from a small airstrip by Nairobi. Soon afterwards Wilson Airways was born – and the same strip is now the busy Wilson Airport.

Mzee Jomo Kenyatta “father of the nation” served as the country's first President when Kenya regained independence from the British in 1963. The international airport is named in his honor.

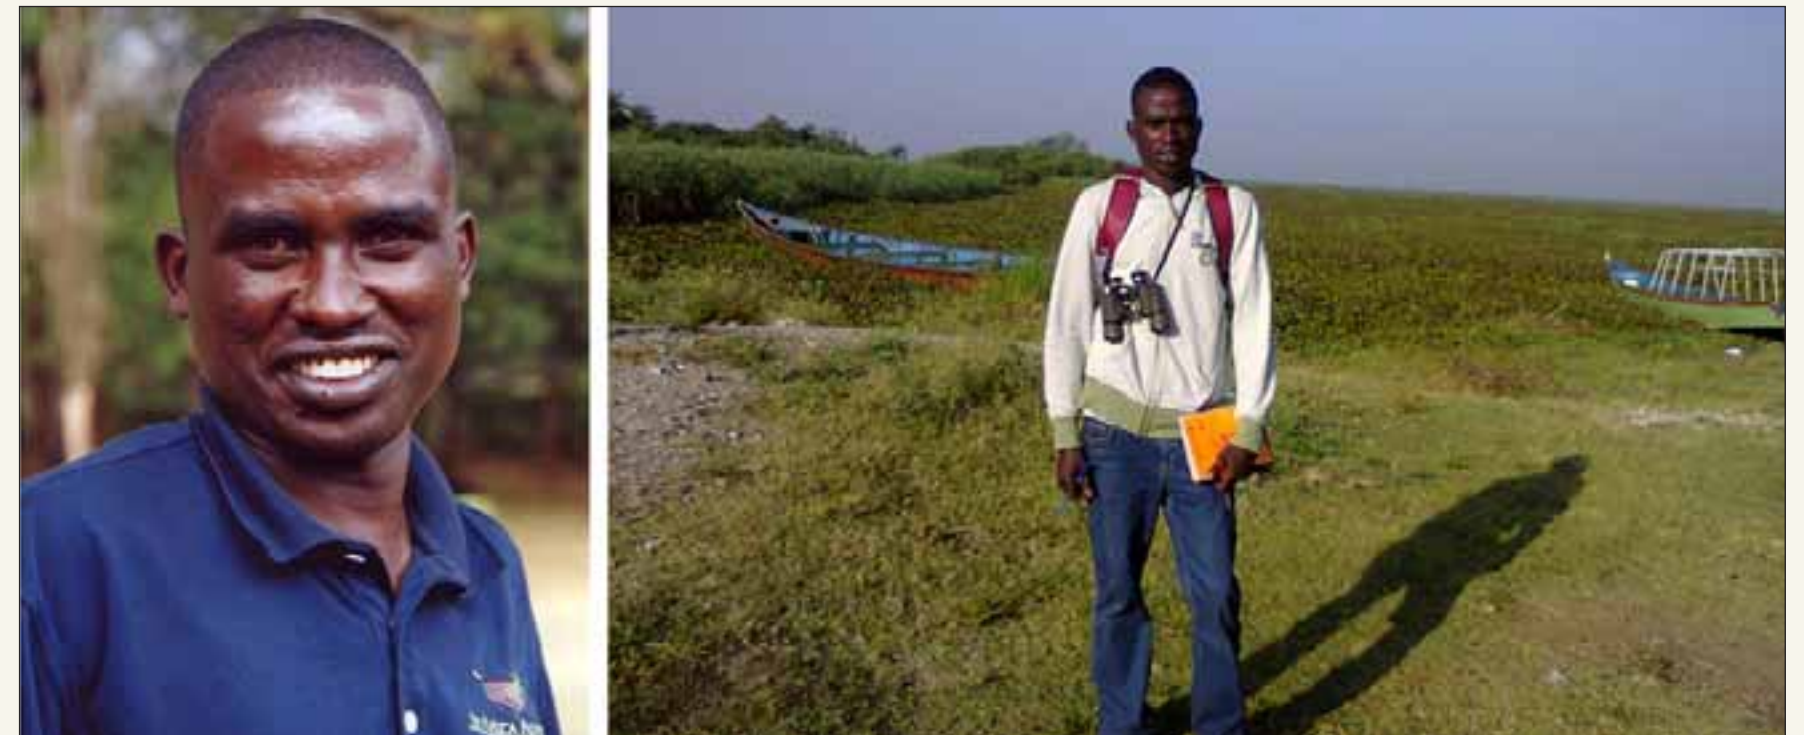

Today Nairobi is a bustling metropolis and the hub for safariers exploring Kenya’s vast game viewing regions. With world class restaurants, extensive shopping and its own national park, Nairobi has something for everyone.

BALLOONING OVER THE MAASAI MARA

Awake between 4:30am-5:30am in the morning with steaming hot coffee and tea brought to your room. Depart between 5:00-6:00am for a short game drive to where the hot-air balloons are being filled. Moments later, lift above the plains of the Maasai Mara for the ride of a lifetime. Silently viewing game from the perfect vantage point, you brush the tops of giant acacia trees for close-up views of birds' nests and baboons. Most animals took little notice, but somehow the hippos know you are there. Maybe it was our shadow or the occasional firing of the burners necessary to keep us aloft.

The pilot is entertaining and knowledgeable of the ecosystem you fly over, and points out a variety of large birds flying along side you, and plains game, and perhaps a lion or cheetah. You may have the opportunity to see part of the Great Migration from the air — an awesome sight indeed!

The return to earth is an event in itself. About an hour after lift-off, the pilot will make a perfect crash landing. By the way, all landings are crash landings, so just follow your pilot's instructions and join in the fun. Minutes later, a champagne breakfast appears on the open savannah within clear view of herds of wildebeest, buffalo and zebra. Your return to camp is another exciting game drive.
